What is Arts and Humanities?

Arts and Humanities is an academic field that explores human culture, experience, and expression through various disciplines. It encompasses subjects that study human societies, history, languages, philosophy, literature, arts, and cultural practices.

Arts deals with creating and expressing ideas through visuals such as paintings and performances such as dance. It is the creative expression of the human imagination. Visual arts could include photography, painting, sculpture etc. Performing Arts (a separate field of education in itself) are related to the expression of human emotions through sound, movement and storytelling. Literary art is a written expression through poetry and fiction.

Humanities is a broader field that studies human culture, history, language, philosophy, and society. It involves the analysis and understanding of human experience, behaviour, and intellectual achievements, often through critical thinking and research in disciplines like history, philosophy, and cultural studies.

Art plays a vital role in shaping our understanding of the world. Through art, we can explore different perspectives, communicate new ideas and emotions, and foster empathy and understanding between different cultures.

Even though arts and humanities are often seen as separate disciplines, they are deeply interconnected. Studying either art can provide deep insights into humanities and vice versa.

Question: Is Arts & Humanities compulsory for a bachelor's degree?

Answer: Students must pass a 10+2 exam from a recognised board in any field, including science, arts, and commerce, to enrol in the B.A. (Bachelor of Arts) program. Most B.A. programs do not require the students to be from a specific stream in Std. XII. Check the official website of the university/institute for their specific eligibility criteria, before applying.

Question: What post graduate degrees can be pursued?

Question: How do I choose the right major in Arts and Humanities?

It's essential to choose a subject that interests you and aligns with your long-term goals. Consider your passions, strengths, and what types of work excite you. If you're unsure, many universities offer exploratory courses or allow you to choose a double major or minor.

Answer: Yes, while some may argue that degrees like engineering or business may lead to more direct job opportunities, an Arts and Humanities degree provides essential skills in problem-solving, communication, and creative thinking. Many employers highly value these competencies in fields like media, public relations, politics, law, and more.

Question: Is it necessary to have a background in specific subjects before starting an Arts and Humanities degree?

Answer: Generally, there's no strict requirement for specific high school subjects, but certain subjects may provide a helpful foundation. For instance, studying psychology, English literature, or sociology at the high school level may prepare you well for an undergraduate degree in those areas.
